Glenmere answers your questions.

*You may feel overwhelmed by the thought of transitioning a family member to an assisted living community. The more openly you address your questions and concerns, the easier it will be to come to a comfortable decision. Some basics to consider:

How do I know when assisted living is the right option for my loved one?

When a loved one is no longer capable of living independently, but does not require the 24-hour skilled nursing care of a traditional nursing home, assisted living is the right option to explore.

What should I look for when touring an assisted living facility?

- Convenient, well-maintained location and personable staff
- Different types, sizes and layouts of apartments available
- Engaging residents and activities
- A range of amenities for recreation/exercise, socializing, dining, and outdoor gardens

Questions to ask when touring an assisted living community:

- *Is it a not-for-profit community?
Who owns/operates it?*
- Is it licensed to provide assisted living and specialized memory care?
- Are there licensed nursing professionals on staff?
- What is the staff-to-resident ratio?
- Are there extra fees above and beyond the monthly service fee?
- Is the community affiliated with a nursing home if the need arises for short-term or long-term skilled nursing care?

Take the next step and see Glenmere firsthand.
